

An illustration of a family of three sitting on a yellow swing set. A man with glasses and a blue shirt sits on the left, a woman with a red headband and a white patterned dress sits on the right, and a young child with blonde hair and a striped shirt sits in the middle. They are all smiling and hugging each other. The background features stylized green bushes and trees against a teal sky. The foreground has a teal background with a pattern of light green circles.

Something else I like about you?
I like the way you feel.

I like when we are side by side and you lean on me and I lean on you and we breathe together at the very same time— in and out!

I like when we snuggle into each other in a big, humongous, gigantic hug. You feel so warm and cozy. I like that about you.

I like how loving yourself means you do your best.
And I like when you do your best.

How sometimes doing your best means a first-place ribbon, and sometimes doing your best means simply showing up.
I like how when you do your best you can celebrate yourself because you know you did your best.

And that's worth celebrating.
You're the best at doing your best.
I like that about you.

Let's start with your face.
I like it so much.
Your face is a stunning,
super-spectacular face.

I like the freckles and spots,
the little birthmarks and the places with no marks at all.
Your face is the only face like it
in the whole, wide, wild world.
I really like your face.
