The Creator in You

WATERBROOK

An illustration of two children, a girl and a boy, sitting under a large tree at night. They are reading a large, open book together. The girl on the left is holding a flashlight that illuminates the book. The boy on the right is looking at the book with a slight smile. In the background, a two-story house with several lit windows is visible under a starry night sky. The scene is rendered in a soft, painterly style with a cool color palette of blues and purples, contrasted by the warm light of the flashlight and the house.

IN THE VERY BEGINNING, a long time ago,

God created the world so that we would all know that He Himself is a working God, though you might think that sounds just a little bit odd.

He didn't go to an office, a school, or a café,
but He worked nonetheless, much like we do today.
On a world dark and empty, He drew up His plans
to make oceans, the sky, and even the land.

With His work just beginning, He rolled up His sleeves and built mountains and rivers and towers of trees.
