

i'll start again
monday

Other Books and DVD Bible Studies by Lysa

Forgiving What You Can't Forget

Forgiving What You Can't Forget DVD and Study Guide

The Forgiveness Journal

Seeing Beautiful Again (devotional)

It's Not Supposed to Be This Way

It's Not Supposed to Be This Way DVD and Study Guide

Embraced (devotional)

Uninvited

Uninvited DVD and Study Guide

The Best Yes

The Best Yes DVD and Study Guide

Unglued

Unglued DVD and Participant's Guide

Becoming More Than a Good Bible Study Girl

Becoming More Than a Good Bible Study

Girl DVD and Participant's Guide

Made to Crave

Made to Crave DVD and Participant's Guide

What Happens When Women Say Yes to God

Children's

It Will Be Okay

Win or Lose, I Love You!

i'll start again monday

BREAK THE CYCLE OF UNHEALTHY EATING
HABITS WITH LASTING SPIRITUAL SATISFACTION

LYSA TERKEURST

NELSON
BOOKS

An Imprint of Thomas Nelson

I'll Start Again Monday

© 2022 Lysa TerKeurst

Abridged from Made to Crave, 9780310293262, © 2010.

All rights reserved. No portion of this book may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means—electronic, mechanical, photocopy, recording, scanning, or other—except for brief quotations in critical reviews or articles, without the prior written permission of the publisher.

Published in Nashville, Tennessee, by Nelson Books, an imprint of Thomas Nelson. Nelson Books and Thomas Nelson are registered trademarks of HarperCollins Christian Publishing, Inc.

Thomas Nelson titles may be purchased in bulk for educational, business, fundraising, or sales promotional use. For information, please e-mail SpecialMarkets@ThomasNelson.com.

Unless otherwise noted, Scripture quotations are from The Holy Bible, New International Version®, NIV®. Copyright © 1973, 1978, 1984, 2011 by Biblica, Inc.® Used by permission of Zondervan. All rights reserved worldwide. www.Zondervan.com. The “NIV” and “New International Version” are trademarks registered in the United States Patent and Trademark Office by Biblica, Inc.®

Scripture quotations marked NASB are from New American Standard Bible®. Copyright © 1960, 1962, 1963, 1968, 1971, 1972, 1973, 1975, 1977, 1995 by The Lockman Foundation. Used by permission. (www.Lockman.org)

Scripture quotations marked NLT are from the Holy Bible, New Living Translation. © 1996, 2004, 2007, 2013, 2015 by Tyndale House Foundation. Used by permission of Tyndale House Publishers, Inc., Carol Stream, Illinois 60188. All rights reserved.

Any internet addresses, phone numbers, or company or product information printed in this book are offered as a resource and are not intended in any way to be or to imply an endorsement by Thomas Nelson, nor does Thomas Nelson vouch for the existence, content, or services of these sites, phone numbers, companies, or products beyond the life of this book.

ISBN 978-0-7852-3250-6 (eBook)

ISBN 978-0-7852-3248-3 (HC)

Library of Congress Control Number: 2021945798

Printed in the United States of America

22 23 24 25 26 LSC 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

To the girl with a weary heart who feels so very alone in this struggle that seems like it will never end . . . Let me be the friend who comes alongside you to say: you are seen. You are loved. You are prayed for. Jesus is with you, and so am I. We can do this. So, let's link arms and face this journey together.

contents

---

Introduction: Finding Your “Want To”	IX
Chapter 1: What’s Really Going On Here?	1
Chapter 2: Replacing My Cravings	8
Chapter 3: Getting a Plan	14
Chapter 4: Friends Don’t Let Friends Eat Before Thinking	19
Chapter 5: Made for More	25
Chapter 6: Growing Closer to God	32
Chapter 7: Not Defined by the Numbers	41
Chapter 8: Making Peace with the Realities of My Body	49
Chapter 9: But Exercise Makes Me Want to Cry	57
Chapter 10: This Isn’t Fair!	65
Chapter 11: Stinkin’, Rotten, Horrible, No Good Day	73
Chapter 12: Curse of the Skinny Jeans	81
Chapter 13: Overindulgence	88
Chapter 14: Emotional Emptiness	96
Chapter 15: The Demon in the Chips Poster	104
Chapter 16: Why Diets Don’t Work	112

contents

Chapter 17: Things Lost, Better Things Gained	119
Chapter 18: Live as an Overcomer	127
Healthy Eating Go-To Scripts	133
Notes	137
About the Author	139

introduction

Finding Your “Want To”

---

A typical book on healthy lifestyle choices should contain lots of talk on vegetables, calories, colon cleanses, and phrases like “you must” and “you should.”

I have a problem with all that talk. It’s not the “how to” I’m missing. It’s the “want to” . . . really wanting to make lasting changes and deciding that the results of those changes are worth the sacrifice.

In light of this admission, I think it’s only appropriate to be honest with you about a few things right up front.

1. I am emotionally allergic to typical books on healthy eating.
2. Not once in my life have I ever craved a carrot stick.
3. I am not overly excited about giving up two of the greatest delights of my taste buds—Cheez-Its and box-mix brownies. In fact, I’ve asked God if it would be such a terribly difficult thing to swap the molecular structure of Cheez-Its for carrot sticks. They're both already orange. And, really, how hard could that be for someone who's turned water into wine?

4. I wasn't sure I had any business writing a book like this. I'm a simple Jesus girl on a journey to finding deeper motivation than just a number on my scale for getting and staying healthy.

I'm not writing this book to beat your taste buds into submission or because I've discovered the magic diet to get you skinny by tomorrow. I'm writing this book because I've struggled way too long with my food choices and my weight. Because I've said, "I'll start again Monday" a thousand times—only to disappoint myself by breakfast. And word on the street says most of my girlfriends fight this draining, dissatisfying cycle day in and day out as well. Which brings me to the fifth thing you should know about me:

5. I started this journey weighing 167 pounds. To some, this is a horrifyingly high number. To others, 167 is a dream weight. In my case, the number itself was not the issue. The issue was how I felt mentally, spiritually, and physically. It was time to be honest with myself.

I think we all get to a place in our lives when we have to give a brutally honest answer to the question, "How am I doing?" It's not really a conversation we have with a friend or family member. It's one of those middle-of-the-night contemplations when there's no glossing over the realities staring us in the face.

I knew certain things about myself needed to change, but it was easier to make excuses than it was to tackle them head-on. Rationalizations are so appealing. See if you relate to any of these:

I'm good in every other area.

I make so many sacrifices already.

I need treats as a comfort in this season of life; I'll deal with my issues later.

The Bible doesn't specifically say this is wrong.

If I really wanted to make a change, I could; I just don't want to right now.

Oh, for heaven's sake, everyone has issues. So what if this is mine?

But excuses got me nowhere fast, especially when it came to healthy eating.

A whole lifetime could be spent giving in to excuses, feeling guilty, resolving to do better, mentally beating myself up for not sticking to my resolve, and then resigning myself to the fact that things can't change.

And I don't want to spend a lifetime in this cycle.

I suspect you don't either.

The book you hold in your hands could be the missing companion you've needed with every healthy eating plan you tried and cried over. I believe it will help you find your “want to.”

In addition to helping you find the desire to conquer your unhealthy eating habits, it also holds the key to something very significant for most of us women: spiritual malnutrition. We feel overweight physically but underweight spiritually. Tying these two things together is the first step on one of the most significant journeys you’ll ever take with God.

It reminds me of a journey described in Matthew 19. A rich young man comes to see Jesus and explains that he is following all the rules but still feels something missing from his pursuit of God. “All these [rules] I have kept,” he says. “What do I still lack?” (v. 20). Or, in other words, “I’m doing the basics of what’s required . . . so why do I still feel that I’m missing something?”

Such a vulnerable question. Such a relatable question.

Jesus responds, “If you want to be perfect [whole], go, sell your possessions and give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven. Then come, follow me” (v. 21).

The rich young man then goes away sad because he won’t give up the one thing that consumes him. He is so full with his riches he can’t see how undernourished his soul is. He’s just like people today who refuse egg whites and fruit for breakfast so they can fill themselves up with candy-sprinkled, chocolate-frosted doughnuts. Even when their sugar high crashes and they complain of splitting headaches, they steadfastly refuse to give up their doughnuts.

In my past sugar-filled life, I might have had some personal experience that led me to think of that frail little analogy.

Anyhow.

Jesus didn't mean this as a sweeping command for everyone who has a lot of money. He meant this for any of us who wallow in whatever abundance we have. I imagine Jesus looked straight into this young man's soul and said, "I want you to give up the one thing you crave more than me. Then come, follow me."

Piercing thought, isn't it?

Suddenly, Jesus isn't just staring at the rich young man; He's also staring at me—the inside me. The part I can't cover up with excuses and makeup.

When Jesus wants us to follow Him—really follow Him—it's serious business: "If anyone wants to come after Me, he must deny himself, take up his cross, and follow Me" (Mark 8:34 NASB).

With Jesus, if we want to gain, we must give up.

To be filled, we must deny ourselves.

To truly get close to God, we'll have to distance ourselves from other things.

To conquer our cravings, we'll have to redirect them to God.

God made us capable of craving so we'd have an unquenchable desire for more of Him, and Him alone.

Nothing changes until we make the choice to redirect our misguided cravings to the only One capable of satisfying them.

Getting healthy isn't just about losing weight. It's about recalibrating our souls so that we want to change—spiritually, physically, and mentally. And the battle really is in all three areas.

Spiritually. I had to ask God to give me the desire to be healthy. I knew a vanity-seeking “want to” would never last. Shallow desires produce only shallow efforts. I had to seek a spiritual “want to” empowered by God Himself.

So, I asked. I begged, actually. I cried out to God. And day by day, God gave me just enough “want to,” laced with His strength, to be satisfied by healthy choices.

God also settled in my heart that this is an issue of great spiritual importance. Think of Eve in the Bible's first recorded interaction between a woman and food. Obviously, the core of Eve's temptation was that she wanted to be like God, knowing good and evil. But we can't ignore the fact that the serpent used food as a tool in the process. If the very downfall of humanity was caused when Eve surrendered to a temptation to eat something she wasn't supposed to eat, I do think our struggles with food are important to God.

Physically. The spiritual perspectives in this book may stir the soul, but the physical realities require turning those spiritual insights into practical choices.

When I began this journey, I finally had to admit that what I eat matters. My weight is a direct reflection of my choices and the state of my health.

I started with a visit to my doctor, which I highly encourage you to do before starting your healthy eating plan. The doctor ran several tests. Except for some results that indicated I wasn't exercising regularly or making the healthiest food choices, the tests came back normal.

Hmfff. Why do doctors always say the same old thing about eating right and exercise?

Feeling sluggish? Eat better, move more. Feeling blue? Eat better, move more. I bet the next time I go in for a sore throat it will be the same thing. Eat better, move more. Have mercy. And we won't even go into the issues I have with the scale in my doctor's office. I am positive it weighs me heavy just to prove his point. See? You need to eat better, move more.

The doctor and the test results were right. My weight issues were directly linked to my food choices. Period. I had to admit it and do something about it.

Mentally. I had to decide I was tired of compromising. What happens when you delete "com" from the word compromise? You're left with a "promise." We were made for more than compromise. We were made for God's promises in every area of our lives.

Honestly, I am made for more than a vicious cycle of eating, gaining, stressing—eating, gaining, stressing . . . I am made to rise up, do battle with my issues, and, using the Lord's strength in me, defeat them to the glory of God.

I hope you'll stick around on this journey of discovering your "want to." I can't promise it will be easy. But I can promise it will be the most empowering thing you've ever done. Just today I put on some jeans I never thought I'd wear again. And while my flesh did the happy dance of success, my soul was far from thoughts of vanity.

My soul felt free. I was amazed that I ever desired to satisfy my taste buds over satisfying my desire to break free from all the guilt, all the destruction, all the defeat.

I still don't crave those blasted carrot sticks. But I found my "want to." I started eating better and moving more. I lost the weight. I feel great. And I have most certainly grown closer to God than ever before.

My truest cravings are satisfied—and yours can be too.

01

what's really going on here?

---

Several years ago, a weight-loss company came up with a brilliant advertising campaign. Maybe you saw some of their ads. A little orange monster chases a woman around, tempting and taunting her with foods that obviously aren't a part of her healthy eating plan. The ads perfectly captured what it feels like to be harassed by cravings all day long.

While the orange monster is a great way to visualize cravings, the ads fall short in their promise to really help a woman. The weight-loss company's theory is to teach what foods are more filling and encourage consumption of those. But does that really help overcome cravings?

For me, it does not. Simply telling me to eat healthier foods that will help me feel full longer doesn't address the heart of the matter. I can feel full after a meal and still crave chocolate pie for dessert. Just feeling full isn't the answer to sticking with a healthy eating plan.

---

So, what's really going on here?

I believe God made us to crave. Now before you think this is some sort of cruel joke by God, let me assure you that the object of our craving was never supposed to be food or other things people find themselves consumed by, such as sex or money or chasing after significance.

Think about the definition of the word craving. Dictionary.com defines craving as “something you long for, want greatly, desire eagerly, and beg for.”<sup>1</sup> Now consider this expression of craving: “How lovely is your dwelling place, LORD Almighty! My soul yearns, even faints, for the courts of the LORD; my heart and my flesh cry out for the living God” (Psalm 84:1–2).

Yes, we were made to crave—long for, want greatly, desire eagerly, and beg for—God. Only God. But Satan wants to replace our craving for God with something else. Here's what the Bible says about this: “Do not love the world or anything in the world. . . . For everything in the world—the cravings of sinful man, the lust of his eyes and the boasting of what he has and does—comes not from the Father but from the world” (1 John 2:15–16).

The passage details three ways Satan tries to lure us away from loving God:

- The cravings of the sinful man
- The lust of his eyes
- The boasting of what he has or does

what's really going on here?

Let's define these things.

According to the commentary in my Life Application Study Bible (NIV):

Cravings = trying to get our physical desires met
outside the will of God

Lust of eyes = trying to get our material desires met
outside the will of God

Boasting = trying to get our need for significance met outside the will of God

Remember Eve? Studying her story, I realized how intentionally Satan chooses his tactics. He knows where we are weak. He desires to lure us away from God. And he knows what works . . . “When the woman saw that the fruit of the tree was good for food [cravings of the sinful man] and pleasing to the eye [lust of the eyes], and also desirable for gaining wisdom [boasting of what she has or does], she took some and ate it” (Genesis 3:6). Eve was tempted in precisely the same three ways the 1 John passage warns us about.

But it doesn't stop there. Look at how Jesus was tempted:

Then Jesus was led by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted by the devil. After fasting forty days and forty nights, he was hungry. The tempter came to him and said, "If you are the Son of God, tell these stones to become bread."

Jesus answered, "It is written: 'Man does not live on bread alone, but on every word that comes from the mouth of God.'"

Then the devil took him to the holy city and had him stand on the highest point of the temple. "If you are the Son of God," he said, "throw yourself down. For it is written:

"He will command his angels concerning you,
and they will lift you up in their hands, so that you will not strike your foot against a stone.'"

Jesus answered him, "It is also written: 'Do not put the Lord your God to the test.'"

Again, the devil took him to a very high mountain and showed him all the kingdoms of the world and their splendor. "All this I will give you," he said, "if you will bow down and worship me."

Jesus said to him, "Away from me, Satan! For it is written: 'Worship the Lord your God, and serve him only.'"

Then the devil left him, and angels came and attended him. (Matthew 4:1-11)

what's really going on here?

Again, the pattern of temptation is the same:

Cravings: Satan appealed to Jesus' physical cravings for food.

Lust of the eyes: The devil promised Jesus entire kingdoms if He would bow down to the god of materialism.

Boasting: The enemy enticed Jesus to prove His significance by forcing God to command angels to save Him.

But here's the significant difference between Eve and Jesus. Eve was saturated with the object of her desire. Jesus was saturated with God's truth.

I obviously wasn't in the garden with Eve, but based on three phrases from Genesis 3:6, I can only infer that she never took her eyes off the fruit as she saw that the food was good, pleasing to the eye, and desirable. She didn't walk away and give herself time to consider her choice. She didn't consult Adam. She didn't consider the truth of what God had clearly instructed or talk to Him. She focused only on the object of her obsession.

Eve craved what she focused on. We consume what we think about. And what we think about can consume us if we're not careful.

We crave what we eat. If I make healthy choices over a period of time, it seems to reprogram my taste buds. The more veggies and fruit I eat, the more veggies and fruit I crave. However, if I eat brownies and chips, I crave brownies and chips in the worst kind of way.

Jesus set a beautiful example of breaking this vicious cycle of being consumed by cravings. It's even more powerful when we understand that Jesus was in a completely deprived state.

Eve was in a paradise garden with her every need provided for. Jesus had been in a wilderness, fasting for forty days. And yet He held strong. He quoted God's Word. And so can we. When we feel deprived and frustrated and consumed with wanting unhealthy choices, we, too, can rely on God's Word to help us.

With each temptation, Jesus quoted Scripture that refuted Satan's temptation. Truth is powerful. The more saturated we are with truth, the more powerful we'll be in resisting our temptations. And the more we'll naturally direct our cravings where they should be directed—to the Author of all truth.

Cravings. Are they a curse or a blessing? The answer to that depends on what we're craving. And what we're craving will always depend on whatever we're consuming . . . the object of our desire or God and His truth.

Consider what it means to the success of your journey to quote Scripture in the midst of a craving attack. One of the most meaningful scriptures I used in this process is "Everything is permissible—but not everything is beneficial" (1 Corinthians 10:23). I quoted this scripture over and over to remind myself that I could have that brownie or those chips, but they wouldn't benefit me in any way. That thought empowered me to make a beneficial choice rather than wallowing in being deprived of an unhealthy choice. As you read this book, make a point to write out meaningful verses and quote them aloud each time the orange monster tries to talk you into tarrying with him awhile.

what's really going on here?

I know it's a battle, sister. But we aren't rendered powerless. The more saturated we are with God's truth, the more powerfully resistant we become. Stick with me here—this isn't a plastic Christian answer. It's one that will change our lives if we let it.

replacing my cravings

---

I roll over and look at the clock. Another day. Beyond all reason and rationality, I slide out of bed and strip off everything that might weigh even the slightest ounce as I head to the scale. Maybe today will be the day the scale will be my friend and not reveal my secrets. Maybe somehow overnight the molecular structure of my body shifted and today I will magically weigh less.

But no. I yank out my ponytail holder—hey, it's gotta weigh something—and decide to try again. But the scale doesn't change its mind the second time. It is not my friend this day.

Vowing to do better, eat healthier, and make good choices, I head to the kitchen only to have my resolve melt like the icing on the cinnamon rolls my daughter just pulled from the oven. Yum. Oh, who cares what the scale says when this roll speaks such love and deliciousness.

Two and a half cinnamon rolls later, I decide tomorrow will be a much better day to keep my promises to eat healthier. And since this is my last day to eat what I want, I better live it up. Another cinnamon roll, please.

---

The next morning I turn over and look at the clock. Another day. Beyond all reason and rationality, I slide out of bed and strip off everything that might weigh even the slightest ounce as I head to the scale. Maybe today will be the day. But once again it isn't. I yank out my ponytail holder and try again. But no.

Vowing to do better, eat healthier, and make good choices, I head into my day, only to find myself making more excuses, rationalizations, and promises for later.

Always later.

And the cycle I've come to hate and feel powerless to stop continues.

Who could I talk to about this? If I admit my struggle to my friends, they might try to hold me accountable the next time we go out. And what if I'm not in the mood to be questioned about my nachos con queso with extra sour cream? I'll just tell them I'll be starting on Monday, and they'll be fine with it. They don't think I need to make changes.

But I did need to make changes. I knew it. Because this wasn't really about the scale; it was about this battle that raged in my heart. I thought about, craved, and arranged my life too much around food. So much so, I knew it was something God was challenging me to surrender to His control. Really surrender. To the point where I'd make radical changes for the sake of my spiritual health perhaps even more than my physical health.

Part of my surrender was asking myself a really raw question.

May I ask you this same raw question?

Is it possible we love and rely on food more than we love and rely on God?

Now, before you throw this book across the room, hear me out. This question is crucial. I had to see the purpose of my struggle as something more than wearing smaller sizes and getting compliments from others.

It had to be about something more than just me.

I had to get honest enough to admit I relied on food more than I relied on God. Food was my comfort. My reward. My joy. Food was what I turned to in times of stress, sadness, and even in times of happiness.

I felt stupid admitting that. I felt like such a spiritual failure.

I told a few people about it and most seemed supportive. But one well-meaning woman quipped what others would echo in the months that followed: “You’re making this diet thing a spiritual journey? Does God really care about our food?”

Yes, I think He does.

God never intended for us to want anything more than we want Him. Just the slightest glimpse into His Word proves that. Look at what the Bible says when God’s chosen people, the Israelites, wanted food more than they wanted God: “They willfully put God to the test by demanding the food they craved” (Psalm 78:18). Yikes.

And what became of them? They never reached the promised land. These people wandered in the desert for forty years, and no one but Joshua and Caleb (the next-generation leaders) was allowed to enter the land flowing with milk and honey.

I don't know about you, but I don't want to wander about in a "desert," unable to enter into the abundant life God has for me because I willfully put Him to the test over food!

When I started, I knew this battle would be hard. But through it all I determined to make God my focus. Each time I craved something I knew wasn't part of my plan, I used that craving as a prompt to pray. I craved a lot. So, I found myself praying a lot.

Don't rush past that last paragraph. I used my cravings for food as a prompting to pray. It was my way of tearing down the tower of impossibility before me and building something new. My tower of impossibility was food. Brick by brick, I imagined myself dismantling the food tower and using those same bricks to build a walkway of prayer, paving the way to victory.

Did this simple visualization make it easier? Sometimes it did. Other times my cravings for unhealthy food made me cry. Seriously, cry. Sometimes I wound up on the floor in my closet, praying with tears running down my face. And I gave myself permission to cry, just like the psalmist:

Listen to my words, LORD,
consider my lament.
Hear my cry for help,

i'll start again monday

my King and my God,
for to you I pray.
In the morning, LORD, you hear my voice;
in the morning I lay my requests
before you and wait expectantly.

(Psalm 5:1-3)

That is exactly what I did.

“God, I want a biscuit this morning. Instead, I’m eating poached eggs. I’m thankful for these eggs, but I’ll be honest in saying my cravings for other things are hard to resist. But, instead of wallowing in what I can’t have, I’m making the choice to celebrate what I can have.”

“God, it’s 10:00 a.m. and I’m craving again. I want those snack crackers that are screaming my name. But instead of reaching for them, I’m praying. I’ll be honest, I don’t want to pray. I want those crackers. But I’ll have a handful of almonds and brick by brick . . . prayer by prayer . . . lay a path for victory.”

“God, it’s lunchtime and all my friends are heading out for Mexican. I love Mexican! I could seriously justify a big bowl of chips and guacamole right now. But once again I’m choosing to pray instead of getting stuck in my craving. Help me, God, to feel satisfied with healthier choices.”

And that’s how my prayers continued throughout the day. Laying my requests before God and waiting in expectation.

Then one morning, it finally happened. I got up, and for the first time in a long while, I felt incredibly empowered. I still did the same crazy routine with the scale—no clothes, no ponytail holder—but I only stepped on it once. The numbers hadn't changed yet, but my heart had. One day of victory tasted better than any of that food I'd given up ever could. I had waited in expectation using prayer as my guide, and I did it.

I did it that day and the next. Then the next. Why not shoot for four victorious days in a row? And then maybe one more.

I can't promise you there won't be any more tears. And I can't promise the scale will magically drop as quickly as you wish it would. But it will be a start. A really good start.

getting a plan

---

Last spring I took a shortcut through a neighborhood and caught a glimpse of a man planting a flower garden. That quick glance was long enough to produce a lingering thought: I wish I had a pretty garden.

For years I've looked at other people's flowers and secretly wished for my own lush display. However, the glimpse of this man with his hands digging deep into the earth brought a new revelation. He has a garden because he invests time and energy to make it. He didn't wish it into being. He didn't just wake up one day and find that a garden of glorious blooms had miraculously popped up from the dirt.

No.

He worked at it. He sacrificed for it. Day after day. Row by row. Seed by seed. Plant by plant.

It took time and commitment before he ever saw any fruit from his labor. But eventually there was a bloom . . . and then another . . . and then another.

I saw this man's flowers and wished for my own—without a clue about all the work that had gone into producing them. I want the flowers but not the work.

Isn't that the way it is with many things in life—we want the results but have no desire to put in the work?

Besides a garden, I also wished for a thinner body for years but was lax about actually changing what I ate. I excused away the necessary discipline, citing my age and metabolism, lamenting the unfairness of my genetic disposition and blah, blah, blah.

The reality is, I can't eat like an athletic teenager and then complain about my extra layers of fluff.

Or my pants size.

Or my arms that are starting to wave back at me when I raise them.

I can't wish blooms into place any more than I can wish fat away. I knew I needed a plan. Something more than "I'll start again Monday."

I had a friend who'd found a nutritionist she really liked. She got her issues under control, lost weight, kept it off, and experienced the empowering feeling of success.

The day of my first appointment with this same nutritionist, I sat in my car and chuckled at my choice for a last meal—the meal before I'd have to make changes.

I stared down at the paper plate. Minutes before, it had been piled high with slices of Chef Boyardee pizza. Cheap, boxed pizza had been the delight of my childhood taste buds. Who am I kidding? It was the delight of my adulthood as well. And if my food choice alone didn't seal the deal that changes needed to be made, my next move certainly did.

I licked the plate.

Yes, I did. If this would be the last time I'd enjoy this delicacy, I was for sure not leaving a drop of sauce on the plate. Not a drop.

Inside the nutritionist's office, I was told I was overweight. This was not news to me. I had gone up two pants sizes during the past year and now even my big pants were protesting.

Something had to give.

Someone had to learn the discipline of giving up some things. And those "things" were poor food choices that were sabotaging my body, my mental energy, and my spirit.

Food had become like a drug. And honestly, it's a good drug choice for a Christian woman. Every church event I attended readily provided my drug out in the open with no hesitation or judgment.

I was eating too much of the wrong kinds of foods and felt trapped in a cycle of hunger. I felt hungry all the time. I was too dependent on food for comfort. I wanted to eat what I wanted, when I wanted, in the quantities I wanted. So, despite exercising, my food choices caught up with me, and my changing body revealed all my secrets.

That's both the blessing and the curse of issues with food. My poor choices will rat me out every time—if not in my waistline, then in my energy level and my overall well-being.

I left the nutritionist's office that day with a plan. Under her supervision and with a weekly weigh-in to hold me accountable, I felt empowered for the first time in a long while.

The plan I chose was strict and restrictive. I knew in my heart it had to be. I had to break the addictive cycles my taste buds had grown to crave. I needed to train my body not to be hungry all the time. I had to keep my blood sugar in check.

The healthy eating plan I adopted then and maintain now is a balanced protein-carbohydrate plan. I learned correct portion sizes, food combining, when to eat, and what to eat. I still eat carbohydrates, but I'm limited in how much and what kind. I don't eat most breads, potatoes, rice, corn, pasta, or other starchy things. Mainly, I eat low-fat meats, veggies, and fruits.

I have a funny truth to share about the healthy eating plan I chose. Basically, I eat what a wild animal eats—meat and things that grow naturally from the earth. Only I cook my food and use manners. I was immediately encouraged by the possibilities of this plan because I have yet to see an overweight animal in the wild lamenting over excess cellulite.

Think about it.

I'm not saying this has to be your plan. (You need to do your research, consult your doctor, and create a healthy and realistic plan for your everyday life.) I'm saying this is my plan and, believe it or not, I've grown to love it. Notice

I said “grown to love it.” I won’t deny there have been some really hard days.

My plan is realistic for me because the foods I eat are things I can buy at my local grocery store and because my family can eat what I eat for the most part. However, they usually have starches that I skip.

This journey will require you to make some tough sacrifices, but I’ve come to look at this process as embracing healthy choices rather than denying myself. There are lessons to be learned and perspectives to be gained in the season of embracing healthy choices. These will not just be physical lessons. The mental and spiritual lessons gained in this time will be the very thing to equip you for the long haul. And keep you healthy and blossoming, just like that man’s garden.

Speaking of gardens, don’t be expecting any fresh-cut flowers from my garden. That is still but a wish.

A girl can’t do it all, you know.