

“I believe many of us have given up on progress and settled for just not failing. But I believe we have a God who longs to reach out and take us by the hand and draw us up toward higher ground. And as long as our fists are clenched around the things we presently trust, we can’t grip God’s outstretched hand. We won’t go any higher.”

“Trust in God does not come naturally or easily. It must be learned, and then it must be exercised frequently. Like a muscle that grows with use, trust in God increases the more we employ it.”
