

The next morning when Emmy woke up, she said to her mama, “I have a great idea! I’m going to ask God to come to my birthday party. Then I can see what He looks like.”

“Your timing is perfect,” Mama said.
“I’m mailing your invitations today.”

“I want to make a very special card for God,” Emmy said,
“with lots of glitter!” Emmy went right to work.
She made the invitation colorful like a rainbow and sparkly like the stars in the sky.

As Emmy waited for her birthday, she talked to God in her prayers. “I hope You liked my invitation, God. I know You are busy, but I hope
You can still come to my party.”

Finally, Emmy's big day arrived! Her friends ran to the front door with presents in their arms. Mama greeted everyone with a kind smile, and all of Emmy's friends gathered around her.

"Guess what?" Emmy told her friends. "I invited God to the party! But I didn't see Him come in. Let's look for Him!"

The girls rushed outside with Emmy leading the way, calling, “God, wheere aaare Youuu?”

Then they hurried to the garden.
Emmy remembered that God created the very first garden, so it seemed like a good place to look.

They searched for God in the rows of beans, and then behind the stalks of corn. They even looked under the prickly blackberry bushes.

